The Midwife as Surgical First Assistant By Nell Tharpe, Caity Byrne

Many midwives include the role of surgical first assistant during cesarean section in their scope of practice. This Handbook guides the midwife through the process of learning the skills needed for the midwife to enhance a woman's experience of cesarean birth or surgery by combining technical skills with woman-centered care. Topics include: Education and Skills for First Assisting; Credentialing and Billing; Assisting with Cesarean Section; and Assisting with GYN Surgery. Surgical first assisting allows midwives to provide continuity of care to women who require cesarean birth or GYN procedures. Midwives who act as surgical first assistants require the knowledge and skills to assist with cesarean birth efficiently, effectively and compassionately. The skill set includes aseptic technique, use of select medical instruments, relevant anatomy, surgical techniques, working as part of the surgical team, and skills to maintain tissue integrity and perform or assist with closures. The Handbook offers detailed step by step guidance for learning this expanded midwifery skill set, including checklists to guide you through the learning and credentialing process.
